Rosemont rolls dice to land casino

By David Ibatia

It won't float, it won't foot and it will stay rooted in one spot, but the Rosemont-O'Hare Exposition Center is about to become the target of a legislative attempt to make it eligible for riverboat-style casino gambling.

Legislators friendly to Rosemont Mayor Donald E. Stephens plan to tack an amendment this week onto a House gambling bill that would put the expo center, the second largest convention center in the state behind McCormick Place, under Illinois' riverboat gambling act.

Stephens conceded that it's a longshot that Rosemont can win permission for a casino.

"I'm not saying we've got this bill locked up," he said. "But I've seen some strange things happen in Springfield."

Probably nothing could be stranger, in this session of the legislature, than for a site along Bryn Mawr Avenue east of River Road in Rosemont to be designated for legal blackjack, craps, roulette and slot machines.

"Without going into the specifics of any proposal, the governor believes that we have enough legalized gambling in Illinois right now," said Dan Eglar, spokesman for Gov. Jim Edgar. "The pot for gambling is only so big."

Stephens proposes renovating one of the original sections of the expo center for a casino, to be owned by the village and operated by the state or by a state-designate with experience in gaming.

"It's a tool," Stephens said. "We don't want the money. All of the money should go to the state common school fund or wherever the legislature deems best."

"There should be only one publicly owned casino—we don't want a 'Glitter Gulch' here—that can be used as a marketing tool for conventions and trade shows."

"Las Vegas is building a one-million-square-foot convention center and they're already talking about a million-square-foot addition," Stephens said.

"If we don't wake up, we'll find ourselves second or third for convention and trade shows."

However, Schaumburg Village President Al Larson said: "I don't see casino gambling as economic development. That's like saying pinball machines generate economic development ... and we don't even permit pinball machines in Schaumburg."

Schaumburg and Rosemont are rivals for state funding for convention centers. In this game, Stephens has proven himself an adept player.

Earlier this year, Rosemont secured $10 million in state civic center funds for an expansion of the expo center while the state denied Schaumburg's request for $20 million to build its own convention hall. Currently, the two communities are closely matched rivals for a proposed Personal Rapid Transit system.

Stephens has been Rosemont's only mayor since the village's incorporation in 1956. He has taken a village that was little more than a few houses, a strip of industry and some hotels and made it into a major convention town.

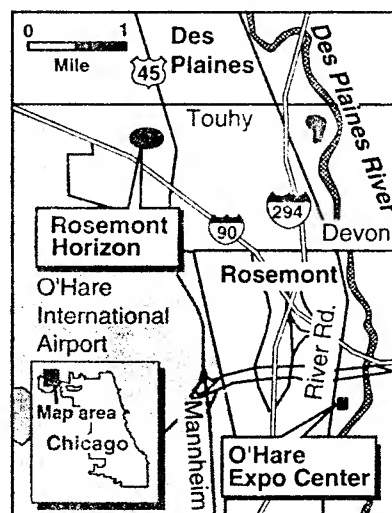

Stephens' tenure hasn't been without controversy, however.

He was indicted twice and acquitted twice on federal tax and fraud charges. He has been investigated by the U.S. attorney's office, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Cook County state's attorney's office and the Illinois Liquor Control Commission. The Internal Revenue Service has audited his tax returns.

Yet in 1985, the federal judge who presided at one of Stephens' trials expressed admiration for the mayor, praising him as exemplifying the people "who make this country go."

State Rep. Ralph Capparelli (D-Chicago), assistant House majority leader, has agreed to introduce the Rosemont casino amendment.

Capparelli also is the sponsor of bills that would bring Navy Pier under the riverboat gambling act and slot machines to O'Hare International and Midway Airports.

"I have no ulterior motive except to get real estate tax relief to people in my district," Capparelli said.

Joseph Mudd, administrative assistant to Stephens for inter-governmental and legislative affairs, said winning the support of the Edgar administration is the key to getting a casino for Rosemont.

While Mudd acknowledged Edgar's concerns about expanded riverboat gambling, he said that the governor hasn't specifically come out against land-based casinos. "This could be a good test to see if there's any support for them."

The Rosemont casino would take up 20,000 square feet in the expo center. The President sidewheeler riverboat, which began playing the Iowa side of the Mississippi River out of Davenport in April, has by comparison 27,000 square feet of gaming space and the average Las Vegas or Atlantic City casino has 60,000 square feet.

"I can't see any difference if I throw my money away in a horse race, lottery, riverboat gambling or a casino," Stephens said.

"What I've said to Joseph Mudd is, 'let's get this thing in as a pilot program.' If it works here, it could work at McCormick Place, too."

STEPHENS, since becoming mayor in 1956, has set-up a vast patronage system in Rosemont with all benefits progressing to the top echelon of Rosemont government officials, i.e. the STEPHENS family. It has even been rumored that STEPHENS reaps a one-dollar a nite payoff from every room rented in Rosemont every night.

Over time, STEPHENS has developed a taste for associating with the fringes of the Chicago mob. He also is thought to envision the River Road corridor of Rosemont with its glittery hotels as a small Las Vegas strip.

Chicago at this time is continuing with leads set out by Dallas in referenced airtels. Results will be forth coming.

Rosemont mayor, kin strike it rich

By Ray Gibson

In 1956, Donald Stephens was a struggling insurance salesman who helped incorporate a tiny northwest suburb as a way of trying to block Chicago's annexation of O'Hare International Airport.

The legal tactic didn't succeed, but Rosemont did, and so did Donald Stephens.

Incorporated on what was a truck farm, the tiny suburb has expanded over swamps and garbage dumps, increasing in population from 84 people to 4,500 residents. Today there are more motel rooms—6,000 plus—than residents in the 2½ square miles of land that make up the village limits.

Stephens has been successful himself, amassing one of the world's largest collections of Hummel figurines, more than a dozen antique cars and boats, homes in Rosemont and unincorporated Des Plaines, and four houses on Wisconsin's Lake Delavan worth more than $700,000, according to land records. For years, he owned the now defunct Caravelle Motel there.

Stephens has been the town's only mayor and has virtually run the village as his personal fiefdom.

"Stephens runs the village as a business for the benefit of the people of the village," said Village Atty. Peter Rosenthal.

Those who reaped the benefits include his relatives and business partners.

In the past several years, four firms owned by Stephens' relatives have received millions of dollars in business deals without competitive bids, according to state and village records.

In addition, three firms owned by Stephens' business partners have received village work, including construction contracts worth at least $18 million to expand the Rosemont Exposition Center, according to the records.

As the village boomed, Stephens became a suburban political power. He is a friend of Gov. James Thompson, is the Republican township committeeman in Leyden Township, and in April was briefly a candidate for the chairmanship of the embattled Cook County Republican Organization.

But with success has come controversy.

"I'm probably the most investigated S.O.B. in the world," Stephens once acknowledged. He has been poked and prodded by the U.S. attorney's office, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Cook County state's attorney and the Illinois Liquor Control Commission. The Internal Revenue Service has audited his tax returns annually.

He was indicted twice on federal tax and fraud charges, and acquitted both times.

Some of his image problems stemmed from his purchase of the Caravelle when it was called the Thunderbolt Hotel from the nephew of Chicago mobster Sam Giancana.

The village's failure to adhere to state law in the bidding of public works projects had been the subject of criticism since 1977, and Stephens has routinely used village vendors to make repairs and renovations on homes he owns.

Stephens' most proud accomplishments have been the construction of the Rosemont Exposition Center, a giant trade show center, and the Horizon, the village-run sports stadium.

Village records show that the Expo Center and the Horizon have been the source of millions of dollars in business for his relatives and business partners.

Six of the seven firms provide trade-show and convention services ranging from telephones to cleaning, for the village or the more than 1.25 million visitors and exhibitors who visit the expo center annually.

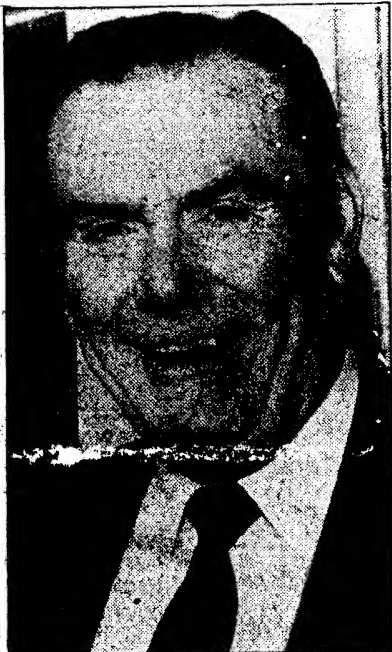

The seventh, Degen & Rosato, a construction firm owned by Ray Rosato and Issac Degen, has been designated as the manager overseeing the expansion of the complex and the building of walkways that link it with nearby hotels. It was paid $18.2 million in 1987 and 1988 for various projects, including the expansion and walkways.

The $28 million center is one of the largest in the nation and has a virtual stranglehold on the convention and trade-show business in the suburbs. Village officials estimate it pumps $214 million a year into the area's economy.

Rosenthal insists that none of the business deals violates state law. Four of the firms received contracts with the village without competitive bidding, but he said state law does not require the village to seek competitive bids.

Two other firms are subcontractors to the company that the village hires to provide decorating, setup, and other services to the convention center.

Rosenthal said the Village Board was fully advised of Stephens family members' financial interests in the firms. Board members also were informed that three attorneys who do legal work for the village have financial interests in some of the firms, he said.

"There is nothing improper or illegal about the Stephens family's involvement in these contracts," Rosenthal said.

Democrats in the Illinois General Assembly said they expect the village to seek passage of a bill later this year that would generate $10 million in state funds to expand the giant complex. A similar funding bill was defeated in January.

Strategically positioned at the edge of the Midwest's largest transportation hub—O'Hare International Airport—the onetime sleepy suburb has expanded with the construction of the exposition center and the Horizon stadium into a major commercial center.

Among the firms in which the Stephens clan has had an interest is Rosemont Exposition Services. The firm has an exclusive contract to provide installation of electrical wiring and setup services to exhibitors at the expo center. Trade show experts say that it is one of the few such arrangements in the country.

In 1989, the village received $1.3 million from the firm, under a contract that stipulates a percentage of the net profits must revert to the village, Rosenthal said. That amount means the firm made at least $500,000 after paying Rosemont.

Rosemont Services once was owned by Michael P. Hogan, the son of William Hogan Sr., who is the head of Local 714 of the Teamsters Union. For the trade show jobs, Michael Hogan's companies hired workers from his father's union.

In 1985, court records show that Michael Hogan dissolved the firm and sold its assets to a new corporation. The new corporation used the same name—Rosemont Exposition Services—and Hogan retained a 20 percent interest in the new firm, according to court documents.

Although the firm's contract with the village states that such a sale was not allowed, Rosenthal said that the firm was simply restructured with new investors. He declined to disclose the identities of the new investors.

By 1988, state records showed the firm's officers and directors included Stephens' son, Mark, and the lawyer who acts as the village's prosecutor, Donald J. Storino.

Storino's law firm and Bomark Cleaning Services Inc., a company partly owned by Mark Stephens, occupy office space in the penthouse atop the Rosemont Village Hall. Rosenthal said the law firm and the cleaning business pay rent but declined to divulge amounts, saying it was confidential.

Last year, the village renegotiated the expo center contract with another firm, O'Hare Exposition Services. That firm has since changed its name to Rosemont Exposition Services and its principals include Storino, but not Mark Stephens, Rosenthal said. The other firm known as Rosemont Exposition Services has since changed its name.

Efforts to reach Storino or Mark Stephens for comment were unsuccessful.

Another Michael Hogan business was O'Hare Expo Maintenance Inc. In 1984, Hogan lost its cleaning contract and Bomark took its place, according to village and court records. Efforts to reach Michael and William Hogan for comment were unsuccessful.

Bomark is owned by Mark Stephens, who also served as the former campaign treasurer of the local political party that has backed his father, and Nicholas S. Boscarino, according to state records. Efforts to reach both men were unsuccessful. Boscarino is an official of Skybox Inc., a firm that leases a sports bar from the village.

located in the Village Hall.

Village records show that in 1988, Bomark received $1.4 million worth of village business for cleaning the center and handling cleaning at the Horizon under another contract. Rosenthal said the company also handles parking at the Horizon under a verbal arrangement with the village.

Bomark's agreement with the village contains language prohibiting the assignment of the contract to another firm.

But according to court records, the firm's superintendent of maintenance has testified at a deposition that, in 1987, Bomark had farmed out the cleaning of the expo center to a temporary employment service that used day laborers. That company is now defunct.

The testimony was given in a deposition as part of a lawsuit filed on behalf of Janice Rippey, a Florida woman who sued, claiming she was hurt when she tripped over a vacuum cleaner cord at a trade show in 1987.

Rosenthal said that the use of day laborers "was an accepted practice and it did not violate" the firm's agreement.

Mayoral Stephens' daughter-in-law, Catherine Stephens, is a part-owner of two firms with business at the expo center—O'Hare Tele-Communications Inc. and Professional Signs Inc. Her husband, Donald Stephens II, is Rosemont deputy mayor.

Under the O'Hare Tele-Communications contract, which dates to 1983, the village receives $5,000 annually and in return grants the company the exclusive right to provide telephone service to exhibitors.

Lydia Freeman is also an officer and director of the corporation, according to state records. Her husband, James A. Freeman, has been the expo center's executive director for the last 14 years and incorporated the firm in 1983.

James Freeman said he was instructed by the Village Board to refer all questions about the firm to Rosenthal.

Rosenthal defended the contract by saying the village had been able to turn a $1.8 million annual profit on the center by turning over work to such private firms, cutting village costs and overhead. He said the center is the only one of its type to make a profit.

Exhibitors at a recent trade show said they were billed about $100 for each phone installed by the firm. Business records show that the firm has had in excess of $400,000 in annual gross sales.

A spokesman for McCormick Place, Chicago's convention center, said the center itself owns the phone system, and its $150 telephone charge per phone goes to pay for the phone system installed at the center.

Freeman's wife, Lydia, refused to discuss her ownership of O'Hare Tele-Communications, saying it was a "private matter." Catherine Stephens did not return phone calls.

The two women also own stock in Professional Signs, which provides temporary signs and posters to exhibitors at the center. Lydia Freeman said she owned 50 percent of the company's stock.

This company was originally formed by Michael Hogan, according to state and court records. Court documents filed by Hogan said he owned 50 percent of the company's stock, which he valued at $20,000. Lydia Freeman, asked how she acquired her stock in the firm, said, "I am not really sure."

James Freeman was among several Rosemont officials who recently testified at state hearings urging state officials not to release $20 million for a competing convention center that Schaumburg officials are trying to build there.

State records show James Freeman was an officer and director of the firm along with Hogan until 1988.

Rosenthal said the sign company has no contracts with the village, and it is a subcontractor to Rosemont Exposition Services. Any revenues the company makes from the sale of signs partly accrues to the village under the agreement with Rosemont Exposition Services, he said.

Mayor Stephens' former business partners, Rosato and Degen, owned interests in several corporations that are involved with the center.

In 1984, Stephens was acquitted of failing to report $82,000 on his 1976 and 1977 income taxes. A year later, Stephens, Rosato and Degen were indicted on mail fraud charges.

The three were accused of fraud arising from two real estate transactions in which Stephens was paid $87,100 and was given a secret ownership in a parcel of real estate, according to federal prosecutors. In 1985, a jury acquitted all three of the charges.

In addition to the $18.2 million in construction work Degen & Rosato received, the two men are also principals in Rosemont Catering Co., which is the exclusive provider of food services, alcoholic beverages, and catering at the expo center.

The company's 1982 contract requires the firm to pay 35 percent of the food and beverage concession revenue to the village. According to Rosenthal, the firm paid the village $738,000 in 1989.

In addition, the firm also now runs a large cafeteria opened this year in the expo center. Rosenthal said the catering company operates the cafeteria under its existing village contract.

The village's condemnation attorneys, William Ryan and the late Thomas Burke, also served as directors and officers of the firm, according to state records.

Ryan refused to return repeated phone calls about his involvement in the catering company. Rosenthal said the two attorneys played no role in reviewing the contract to Rosemont Catering.

According to court records, another firm controlled by Degen & Rosato, called Expo Carpenters Inc., is a subcontractor for Rosemont Exposition Services. In the settlement of a 1988 federal lawsuit, the firm paid $190,000 to a Redmond, Wash., man who claimed Expo Carpenters and Rosemont Exposition Services were at fault when two employees dropped a conveying belt on his head while setting up an exhibit for a trade show at the center.

Cook County Building Department records show the construction company was the general contractor that completed a $33,000 renovation on a home Mayor Stephens owned in nearby unincorporated Des Plaines. The electrical work at the house was done by Gurtz Electric Co. of Chicago, a firm that received $1 million in payment from the village in 1987 and 1988. A spokesman for the firm declined comment.

The former 1st National Bank of Schiller Park, which was also doing business with the village, sold Stephens the home for slightly less than it had paid at a sheriff's sale, land records show. The bank also lent the mayor $440,000 over the years for acquisition and development of property the mayor owns in Wisconsin.

'Dance hall' ordinance is approved

By Lori Stahl

Staff Writer of The Dallas Morning News

The City Council on Wednesday approved a six-month ban on new "dance halls" after a "semi-nude" cabaret tried to open near the West End.

Council member Lori Palmer offered a resolution calling for the moratorium on dance hall permits after learning that the Gold Club had leased space formerly occupied by the Starck Club in the Brewery building.

"It just seems that it's common sense that certain businesses just don't belong in certain areas of the city," Ms. Palmer said.

In 1989, the city barred sexually oriented businesses from operating within 1,000 feet of historic districts such as the West End.

The Gold Club would be considered a "dance hall" rather than a sexually oriented business, however, because the female dancers would wear pasties. The city's dance hall ordinance doesn't mention proximity to historic districts.

John Kirkendoll, chief executive officer for the Gold Club, said the bar features female dancers in a cabaret setting.

"The whole notion that we attract a bad crowd of people or a bad clientele is wrong," he said.

An existing Gold Club operates at Swiss Avenue and Central Expressway.

The business sought the Brewery location to draw "white-collar businessmen and conventioners," he said. It has not yet obtained a dance hall permit for the site.

But Bethany Reid, executive director of the West End Association, said, "We want a different kind of atmosphere here."

Mr. Kirkendoll said the landlord at the Brewery is trying to renegotiate the Gold Club's 10-year lease. He declined to give details of the dispute but said the matter is in court.

Assistant City Attorney Postell told the council that moratorium on dance hall permits will "preserve the status quo while the city staff studies the issue."

Only council member Al Scomb voted against the council resolution. He said his colleagues should focus on more important issues, such as drug abuse.

Council member Jim Buer who heads the public safety committee, said he favored the ban. "I believe it's a useful tool to be used sparingly, and I believe in one of those appropriate times, said."
